

Invitation to the 1st Navigating Knowledge Landscapes' PhD training, Ljubljana, December 4th, 2019.

Innovative knowledge in the digital society

This PhD training is the first in a series of PhD training events. This year, it will be held in Ljubljana, Slovenia, on the 4th of December: the day before the annual NKL International Conference (in 2020, this event will be held in Germany and in 2021, in Sweden). The PhD training addresses the PhD students of the NKL network as well as the PhD students of NKL members, the intention being to offer an international network of peers, which can support the process of PhD-work, and the transition in to post-doc projects and positions.

This PhD training takes its point of departure from the PhD students' own projects. The participants are expected to submit a one-page text to the tutors at latest one week prior to the event. This text should include information about themselves, their research projects (including empirical material, theories, methods and, if applicable, preliminary findings). During this one-day event, each PhD student will also be asked to comment on another PhD student's text on a paired basis, and, after that, engage in a wider group discussion, moderated by a number of selected tutors, among them Joachim Allgaier, Srećko Gajović, Franc Mali, Jennie Olofsson and Anna Lydia Svalastog.

Ultimately, the PhD students, as a group, are expected to present a short report from, and reflections on the PhD training event at the NKL International Conference on December, the 5th (10-15 minutes).
